

difference which had arisen between himself and his employer.

Not Too Late to Do Good.
"Isn't it a fact that you turned informant after you were discharged and because you wanted to get even?" asked Lawyer Wendenburg.

"It is true that I did not report this until after I had left the employ of the company," replied Elmore, "but I didn't do it to get even."

"What was your reason for turning informant, then?"

"Well," replied the witness, "I reckon it never gets too late to do good."

Attorney Wendenburg tried to force an admission from the witness that he deliberately aided and abetted the fraud against the government. In full knowledge that he was violating the law and participating in a criminal act, Elmore admitted full knowledge of the transactions between the distillery and the sauger, but insisted that he was guiltless of crime because he was merely carrying out the orders of his employer. He was working for his living, he said, and it was none of his affair for what purpose money which didn't belong to him was paid out.

Attorney Wendenburg commented significantly upon the fact that since Elmore turned informant he has been given a position in the revenue department as a special employee. The circumstance, he thought, looked queer.

Atkins on Stand.

George Atkins, of the revenue department, testified that he had inspected the books and plant of the company on different occasions in the months of November and December and found them free of suspicion. His chief value to the government as a witness was his testimony touching the maximum capacity of the distillery to question.

Attorney Wendenburg and D. Lawrence Grover, of Norfolk, and George A. Hanson, associate counsel appearing for Burroughs, had attempted to prove that the capacity of the distillery made it physically impossible for it to have produced more than half of the spirits represented by the amount which Elmore says went out of the distillery from.

They undertook to show that under the ninety-six hour limitation demanded for fermenting the mash, the distillery in question could produce only the amount of spirits upon which the government records show tax had been paid, and that the blockade whiskey mentioned in the indictment was therefore a pure fabrication.

Says Capacity Could Be Doubled.

Witness Atkins asserted, upon examination by District Attorney Lewis, that notwithstanding the fact that seventy-two hours of fermentation was needed for the best results, and possibly the full ninety-six-hour limit allowed by the government, it was possible, under favorable circumstances, to distill a mash with good results after only forty-eight hours of fermentation. It was possible by such a plan practically to double the capacity of the distillery.

Upon cross-examination by Attorney Wendenburg, he admitted that it would be difficult to practice such a plan without discovery by the government inspectors, who made frequent tests of the beer as to acidity, and who under ordinary circumstances would detect the age of a mash in their tests, and would be likely to discover the fact that two mashes were being made daily instead of the one permitted by the survey. It could never be accomplished, he asserted, without the connivance of the gauger.

Will Continue Case To-Day.

Examination of witnesses will continue to-day, with some probability that the case will reach the jury late in the evening. The defense stated yesterday that it will place Elmore on the stand again to-day for the purpose of further cross-examination, in the course of which it expects to show by his own records that he made false entries in the books which he was required to keep by the government, and that it was physically impossible for the distillery to produce the amount of spirits represented by his books.

Assistant District Attorney Robert H. Talley assisted District Attorney Lindsey, who conducted the examination of government witnesses. Elmore, both government attorneys will continue the prosecution to-day, when, it is expected, Burroughs, the defendant, will be put on the stand by his lawyers.
